INTRODUCTION

In this mini-book you will find out about the US Defense Department's remote viewing research, which is popularly referred to as the Star Gate program. I'm not a remote viewing practitioner, but I have known those who are. I've seen skilled remote viewers at work and know what can be done with this discipline. Also I've received training in psychic self defense and remote psychic healing. And some of my trainers were skilled remote viewers. So I do have a background in psychic practice and research. My modest book here doesn't teach you how to do remote viewing, but if you are interested in learning this discipline, this volume would be a brief introduction. My intention here is to give the reader a reasonable overview of how and why remote viewing works. However, the main reason for this discussion of remote viewing is to show what it reveals about the human mind and how those revelations relate to the issue of extraterrestrial intelligence.

We are not isolated beings trapped on Earth island alone in this dark region of space. We are mentally expansive beings connected to our galaxy and to the Cosmos at large. There are other intelligent beings out there in the vast territories among the stars. Some of them despise humanity and would destroy us. But some of them respect us and would see us survive. And some of them have already traveled unseen to our Earth to judge our species. This is not what we have been told by the authorities of our world, but it is the truth nonetheless. There has been a considerable effort on the part of the authorities to suppress all public awareness of psychic ability and of extraterrestrial intelligence. It's been said that knowledge is power, and this is doubly true when it comes to a knowledge of these subjects.

STAR GATE REMOTE VIEWING

During the Cold War, the government of the United States found out that the Soviet Union was doing research into psychic power. Fearing that this might give them an advantage, the Defense Intelligence Agency, DIA, started their own classified research in response. This research officially began around 1975. Much of the research would come to be involved with remote viewing. This practice was described as a type of clairvoyance in which persons and events could be perceived at a distance through an extrasensory means. In 1991 this research program was named Star Gate. In 1995, the oversight for the program was then transferred from the DIA to the CIA. Soon after this transfer, the CIA hired a research group to analyze the success of Star Gate. The report released by this research group suggested that remote viewing worked, but doubts were expressed about its effectiveness.

The official disinformation story told by the Skeptics of remote viewing is that this practice has been proven to be a complete failure. They would have you believe that after approximately twenty years of research done at an expense of twenty million dollars, the government ended Star Gate because it concluded that remote viewing was a pseudoscience. However any honest researcher is forced to conclude is that the Skeptics are mistaken and that the CIA lied.

The CIA's History of Lies:

One reason you should question the CIA's report condemning the Star Gate program is because the CIA has a long history of telling lies. Here are just a few examples of the many times when the CIA was caught in a bald-faced lie.

During the Reagan Administration the CIA lied about the fact that it was involved in smuggling cocaine from Central American as a way of funding the Contra War in Nicaragua. Allegations by former DEA agent Celerino Castillo drew the attention of the journalist Gary Webb. He would go on to expose the fact that the CIA was behind the crack epidemic of the 1980s.

Furthermore, the CIA was involved in creating the false intelligence which led to the 2003 Iraq Invasion. Using a questionable source named "Curveball" they ignored warnings from reliable intelligence sources and falsely concluded that Saddam Hussein was creating Weapons of Mass Destruction.

In another incident, news sources revealed information from an unreleased Senate report in 2012. These showed that the CIA had lied about its post 9/11 torture program, exaggerating its effectiveness and understating its brutality.

Again, in another incident, the CIA was caught in a blatant lie following the Boston Marathon Bombing of 2013. Directly contradicting previous public statements, the CIA was forced to admit that bombing suspect Tamerlan Tsarnaev was a former CIA asset in Russia who they had put on a terrorist watch list prior to the bombing.

In 2014 CIA Director John Brennan was caught in a lie when he said, “Let me assure you that the CIA was in no way spying on the Senate.” In fact, the CIA’s own Inspector General completely contradicted that statement by admitting that the CIA had hacked into the computers of Senate staffers.

And these are only a few highlights in the CIA’s long history of deliberate misinformation. So it should be no surprise to anyone that the CIA also lied about the effectiveness of the Star Gate program. What actually took place was that the government decided to conceal from the public the alarming effectiveness of psychic ability. The Star Gate program had demonstrated that it was possible to psychically manipulate the minds of unsuspecting persons. Those in power wanted this revelation kept secret. So the government took oversight authority for this program away from the DIA and gave it to the professional liars at the CIA. Thus the cover-up began.

The History of Psychic Research:

To understand the Star Gate research program, you have to understand what preceded it.

If we were to really go back into a time when human beings first started using their psychic abilities, we would have to go back into neolithic times. We would talk of how tribal shaman used primitive rituals to create altered states of consciousness. We would talk of tribal peoples who would go on vision quests. And we would talk of how they painted such visions onto rock faces and the walls of caves. For, until relatively modern times, there has never been a time when human beings did not use their psychic abilities.

Although there are those who believe that human civilization existed prior to Sumer, most contemporary historians attribute the Ancient Sumerians with the beginning of human civilization some six thousand years ago. However, undoubtedly, there were highly organized cultures which preceded Sumer. Some of these cultures left behind ruins which still speak to their greatness. The Gobekli Tepe Temple Complex in Turkey dates back to the 10th-8th millennium BCE, for example. However the Sumerians did have a farming society which had many of the features that we today associate with civilization. They had irrigation for crops, laws, courts, armies, Kings and most importantly, written language. Their cuneiform tablets written on clay have survived to this day.

And one thing that we have learned from these writings is that the ancient Sumerians were very concerned with psychic predictions. Their system of astrology seems to have influenced astrological systems throughout the world. And they were concerned with numerous other forms of divination.

Throughout the ancient world, it's difficult to find any culture that did not concern itself with one form of psychic ability or another. In ancient Greece, there was the famous Oracle of Delphi. This lasted from 1400 BC until the 4th Century AD. And there are numerous other examples of ancient institutions and practices concerned with psychic ability.

Knowledge of these ancient beliefs can be found in Hermetic teachings. Hermes is the name of an ancient author. His teachings describe alchemy, astrology and theurgy. Alchemy was a proto-science studied by Isaac Newton and other early natural philosophers. It marked the beginnings of chemistry and physics. Theurgy is considered to be divine magic. It is the science of divine works. Among other things, this is the use of ritual to acquire sacred knowledge and to remotely influence the events of the world. Theurgy is distinguished from Goetia, also known as sorcery, which is used to invoke demons. Hermetic writings would eventually be forbidden by the Medieval Christian Church. But nonetheless Hermetic teachings did influence Western Civilization and were an important aspect of the Renaissance. Powerful secret societies based on Hermetic knowledge exist to this day.

Spiritualism was a popular movement in England and the United States from the 1840s to the 1920s. This was a movement largely concerned with raising the spirits of the dead. It was populated mostly by frauds who used tricks to deceive those bereaved persons who were mourning their loved ones. However it did spawn some of the earliest scientific research into psychic ability.

The Society for Psychical Research was founded in London in 1882. It was concerned with thought-transference, mesmerism, mediumship, ghosts, seances and the life force. A similar organization in the United States was the American Society for Psychical Research. This was founded by William James who is sometimes referred to as the Father of American Psychology. Although such organizations brought respect to psychic research, they produced little practical results. In some cases they did debunk certain psychic frauds. And they did in other cases endorse some individuals whom they concluded were legitimately psychic. But this type of early psychic research was largely driven by a desire to study and promote metaphysical philosophy.

In the 1930s and 1940s Joseph Rhine popularized the idea of parapsychology with his research. He founded the Rhine Research Center as a successor to the Duke University Parapsychology Laboratory. He is largely remembered for his use of Zener Cards in his psychic research. These cards consist of geometric symbols such as a square, circle, star and so forth. Although you see the beginnings of a scientific method in this research, there is little practical application that can be made from this type of early parapsychological research.

The Christian Edgar Cayce, on the other hand, was primarily concerned with using his psychic powers to benefit others. He became famous for doing readings in which he used his psychic powers to help people, particularly with health issues. He founded the Association for Research and Enlightenment, A.R.E., in the 1930s. Countless persons were helped by him and he did much to promote the holistic health movement.

In the post-WWII era, as Eastern Philosophy became popular in the West, it also came to influence psychic research and practice. One example of this is the Japanese healing technique known as Reiki. This word is translated as Universal Life Force. Reiki Healers are known to send healing energy to clients in remote locations. Other examples of Eastern influence are found in the Hindu concepts of kundalini and the chakras. Kundalini could be simplistically described as a spiritual energy which arises up from the base of the spine resulting in an experience of enlightenment. The chakras are psychic centers in the body which may be visualized as spinning wheels. These are located along the spine and at key points in the brain. A synergy of new cultural influences as well as advanced scientific understandings took place in the 1950s and 1960s. This fusion of ancient wisdom guided by the scientific method resulted in a highly progressive research environment. There were actually a number of successful psychic research programs taking place in California and elsewhere. All of this would contribute to the emergence of the remote viewing research.

Stanford Research Institute, SRI:

SRI has been around in one form or another since 1946. It performs client sponsored research and development for governmental agencies as well as business interests. It's a highly respected research organization which has received a thousand patients. It's been involved with environmental issues, science and technology. During the 1970s the SRI physicists Russell Targ and Harold E. Puthoff conducted experiments into psychic abilities.

A great deal of propaganda has been disseminated which claims that these experiments were a complete failure, but nothing could be further from the truth. The disinformation about the success of the SRI psychic research stems from the fact that the United States government is obsessed with keeping secrets. And the last thing that government officials want is for ordinary citizens to use their psychic insights to expose governmental corruption. So the government sponsored both the psychic research itself and then the following disinformation campaign which discredited this research.

SRI is one of the most respected research institutes in the world, and common sense should tell you that it would not have allowed researchers to spend years working on psychic research had such research not proved itself valid time and time again.

As top physicists in their field, Russell Targ and Harold E. Puthoff understood the significance of quantum physics to the application of psychic technology. And they were well suited for developing a new technology because of their backgrounds. Harold E. Puthoff had worked with tunable lasers and electron beam devices. He would eventually become the founder of a Corporation and several prominent scientific research organizations. Prior to working on psychic research, Russell Targ worked on laser technology for the Technical Research Group and Sylvania Electronic Systems. In 1970s he joined Puthoff in the SRI Electronics Bioengineering Laboratory as a senior research Physicist. They would do psychic research there for a number of years. After leaving SRI, Targ worked on electro-optics as a senior staff scientist for Lockheed Missiles Space Company. Their otherwise impeccable careers as research scientists stand in contrast with the criticism of their work for SRI, which is often described by Skeptics as pseudoscience.

The attacks on the scientific credibility of their SRI psychic research seem to be lead by the Amazing Randi, who is a Las Vegas stage magician with no degree in the sciences. Although claiming to be a scientific Skeptic, he lacks any experience working with authentic scientific research and development. Although his debunking of the more obvious psychic and religious frauds is to be admired, he lacks all discernment when it comes to distinguishing between those obvious fakers and the serious scientific research done at SRI. I believe that this lack of discernment may be intentional. I consider the possibility that he is a well-funded front-man for those disinformation agents who would hide in the shadows. I would suggest to the reader that the propaganda attacks on the SRI and DIA remote viewing research projects are nothing more than a typical misinformation campaign. Perhaps the greatest magic trick that this illusionist has ever performed is to convince the public that he's an objective man of science.

The Physics of Psychic Ability:

But let's go back to what actual scientists have to say about the real science involved with remote viewing. I believe that Targ, Puthoff as well as the nuclear physicist

Edwin C. May have all appreciated the two scientific principles explained below. These pioneering psychic researchers have well understood how these principles apply to the subject of psychical research.

Although I am not a physicist, I have worked on the radio and internet with Rich Winkel of thoughtcrimeradio.com, and he does have a degree in physics. There are two concepts from physics which in particular relate to the subject of psychic ability. These are holographic intelligence and quantum nonlocal interconnectedness. Both of these principles are well proven by scientific research. However, it's difficult for the average person to comprehend these principles because they feel so counterintuitive.

In recent years scientists have greatly progressed in terms of understanding the universe. They have discovered new theories, one of which is the Holographic Principle.

Before we go into that, we need to cover the subject of holography. A hologram is a 3-D (three-dimensional) photograph, made with the help of a laser.

In holography, two light waves come together to create an interference pattern. To visualize what an interference pattern is, imagine that you are standing by a pond whose surface is perfectly calm. You throw a pebble into the pond thus causing waves, in concentric circles, to radiate outward from where it hit the pond. You throw a second pebble into the pond with the same result. When the wave patterns from these two pebbles run into one another, you get an interference pattern.

To have wave interference for holography you need at least two light waves. The first wave bounces off the object, thereby taking its shape. We call this the object wave. The second wave of light, that has not bounced off the object, is used to perform interference. It's called the reference wave. When an object wave meets a reference wave, they create a standing wave-pattern of interference.

This standing wave-pattern is captured on film. This photographic record is called a hologram. After you develop the film and look at this hologram, all you see is a meaningless image of light and dark lines. However, when this hologram is exposed to a laser light beam, you can observe a 3-D image made of light which reproduces the original object.

As a famous holographic princess once said, "Help me Obi Wan Kanobi you're my only hope."

What's significant about this is, that unlike normal photographs, every part of a hologram contains all the information possessed by the whole. This has led to the principle that says, "all of an object is in every part." This is called the Holographic Principle. Therefore, if we take something apart, which is constructed of a hologram, we will get a smaller version of the whole rather than just one piece of the whole.

What I've been told is this, if you were to cut off part of a hologram and use a laser to create a holographic image with what's left, you would still get the same image as before, but with less resolution.

There are many ways in which you can see the Holographic Principle in nature. For example, the DNA which is in every cell contains a complete blueprint for the entire body. All of the organism is in every part.

This Holographic Principle suggests an entirely new understanding of how our universe is made. Scientists have started using the Holographic Principle to explain advanced theories for physics. All of the Cosmos is in every part of it. What this means in simple terms is that within every part of the Cosmos is a complete knowledge of the entire Cosmos. To make this even more personal, what this means is that on the deepest level of your consciousness, all of the knowledge contained in Cosmic consciousness is also contained within you. And the universe could not possibly be constructed in any other way.

The second principle is quantum nonlocal interconnection. A quantum is a subatomic quantity of energy. It is the smallest of measurable particles. The study of these are the basis of quantum physics. This is a description of the space-time continuum which defies classical mechanics.

The term classical mechanics describes the system of physics begun by Isaac Newton and other 17th century natural philosophers. It was built upon the earlier astronomical theories. These theories of physics were developed long before the emergence of quantum physics and Einstein's Relativity. Classical mechanics does a good job of explaining the motion of planets or even the movement of balls on a billiard table, however these theories of physics completely fail to explain the mechanics of subatomic particles.

It's been proven that under certain conditions twin particles that have been separated by distance still remain connected in some way. But this connection is not through the sequential motions of cause and effect as described in classical mechanics. To visualize this, imagine a billiard table with two balls on it. In classical mechanics, in order for one billiard ball to influence the other, it would have to roll across the table and hit it. But if you shrink this image down to a subatomic level, then quantum mechanics replaces classical mechanics. So if you wiggle one billiard ball on one side of the table, this automatically and remotely influences the other billiard ball to wiggle. But this is just a visualization to help you picture the difference between classical and quantum mechanics.

In quantum mechanics it's been observed that the emission of two photons or two elementary particles from a common source can become entangled even though they travel away from each other at the speed of light. If you influence one of them, the other one is influenced as well. Einstein's Special Relativity postulated that things traveling away from each other at the speed of light are disconnected, so there would be no way for communication between them to take place. But this is the point where classical mechanics fails to apply and quantum mechanics has to take over. This interconnection can't be through light, which is the fastest expression of energy in the material universe. So quantum mechanics only makes sense if there is a deeper level of pure consciousness and information upon which the entire Cosmos is based.

“All matter originates and exists only by virtue of a force...We must assume behind this force the existence of a conscious and intelligent Mind. This Mind is the matrix of all matter.” Max Planck, quantum physicist

These revelations compel you to consider the idea of a Universal Mind which manifests the existence of the material universe from a subatomic level. Therefore what actually connects subatomic particles is a cosmic intelligence. So this idea of nonlocal connection transcends the limits of even Einstein's original theory. And it makes it clear that we live in an Intelligent Universe. The quantum physicist David Baum called this phenomenon quantum interconnectedness. Nonlocal connection may be the most important discovery in all of science because it demonstrates the extent to which classical mechanics has misperceived the deeper reality of our living universe.

Classical mechanics and quantum mechanics are the two major aspects of physics. Classical mechanics describes the set of physical laws defining the motion of bodies under the influence of a system of forces. Classical mechanics does a good job in explaining the motion of macroscopic objects, such as projectiles or the parts of machinery. It also describes the movement of astronomical objects, such as spaceships, galaxies, planets, moons or stars. It can even deal with the motions of solids, liquids and gases. However, classical mechanics only provides accurate results when the domain of application is restricted to large objects. It also fails to apply when the speeds involved with the object begin to approach the speed of light. When the object being dealt with becomes sufficiently small, as in the subatomic realm, then you need to use quantum mechanics. This science reconciles the macroscopic laws of physics with the atomic and subatomic nature of matter. So as you go into the subatomic realm, the laws of physics change. Until quantum physics came along, scientists tended to think of the universe as being like a giant machine. They conceived of the universe as being without awareness or intelligence. Now the most advanced scientists realize that the actual building blocks of the universe are consciousness and information.

So ask yourself this: What is the size of a thought? How big is a unit of mental conception?

If the basic building blocks of mental energy are subatomic, then the rules of classical mechanics don't apply to them. So the human mind actually operates on the rules of quantum mechanics. The physical body may be limited by the rules of classical mechanics but the mind is not. The brain itself may be subject to the laws of classical mechanics. But the mind itself is the consciousness and informational aspect of the brain's functions. And the mind is made up of subatomic energies which transcend classical mechanics and only obey the laws of quantum mechanics. Hence, quantum nonlocal interconnectedness applies to the mind. And this realization changes everything.

The significance of all this to psychic research is that it explains why human minds are entangled to one another. So this explains why telepathy is possible. And, in fact, on a subconscious level of mind, telepathy is unavoidable. You are subconsciously and telepathically connected to everyone else. There is no way that you could not be. The universe is designed this way. The people who we call telepaths are simply taking subconscious information and making it conscious.

What quantum nonlocal connection also explains is why, in remote viewing, mental abilities are not limited by the barriers of space and time. The natural laws which govern space and time in classical mechanics do not apply to quantum mechanics. Space and time are barriers to light and matter, but quantum nonlocal connections do not respect these barriers. Space and time do limit the abilities of the physical body, but they are not barriers to what the mind can know. The arrow of time governs the laws of classical mechanics. Time only flows sequentially from the past to the future in classical mechanics. But time exists as a holistic continuum on the deepest subatomic level. The arrow of time does not restrict quantum reality the way that it does in classical physics.

The arrow of time restricts the physical body. The physical body is always stuck in the present time, always moving from the past to the future. But the mind can escape this prison of the arrow of time. The mind can run free in any direction, past or future, and to any time period. The mind does not have to move sequentially, it can pop from one time period to another instantaneously. So time is not a barrier for trained psychics who know how the mind really works.

What the Holographic Principle explains is how you can have knowledge of a remote location in the universe from your present position in space and time. Within a deep level of your mind's consciousness is a complete mental blueprint of the entire Cosmos. If you can access this deep level of mind, you gain access to an accurate model of the entire universe. And with mental concentration, through a nonlocal connection, you can access any location in any time period in the Cosmos.

The Holographic Principle and quantum nonlocal interconnection are really revolutionary concepts, but they are nonetheless scientifically valid. These are well proven scientific principles.

My book on Psychic Abilities:

The above principles of physics explain why psychic abilities work and how they are possible. Remote viewing is only one form of psychic practice which takes advantage of these new revelations. I am the author of the book, Psychic Development for Prosperity, Self Defense & Political Influence. In it I describe techniques for psychic development which were created by a Christian think tank of psychic researchers. Some of these researchers had studied ancient Hermetic teachings, some of them had studied A.R.E. materials and some of them had studied remote viewing as well as other psychic practices which were explored in the government's psychic research programs. These Christian think tank researchers have not trained me in remote viewing, but have they have trained me in psychic practices based on the same principles. Everything I've learned from them I've put into my book on Psychic Development. This book was written not just for Christians but for everyone. These techniques in my book are much easier to learn than remote viewing and they are safer to practice. Furthermore they have a wider scope of applications than does remote viewing. To find out about my book on Psychic Development visit this link below.

However, I have to admit that skilled remote viewers are very impressive in what they can do with this unique discipline. Truly, remote viewing is a mental technology created by skilled research scientists.

The Scientific Method:

When physicists of SRI got together with a psychic named Ingo Swann, a reliable set of protocols emerged. These protocols represent an exact methodology. This is a mental technology rather than a machine technology. But the development of any technology arises from the same type of process which involves ongoing research and experimentation.

The scientific method involves experimentation through trial and error. For example, the first electrical light is usually attributed to Humphry Davy created in 1809. But it was impractical for general use. However, the idea for a practical electric light never died. Seventy years later, Thomas Edison, after thousands of experiments, came up with a light bulb that could shine for 1500 hours. This is how real science works, it takes years of research and development as well as many experiments.

Most of the Skeptics of remote viewing are stage magicians with no real training in science, or they are insignificant scientists with mediocre intellects. If the Skeptics movement had been in charge of inventing the light bulb, they would have insisted that all research into the electric light bulb cease after one or two failed experiments. They would have declared that the electric light bulb was scientifically impossible. Thereafter they would have accused anyone who believed in the possibility of the electric light bulb of being mentally ill or a fraud. This denial of the possibility of the electric light bulb would be insisted upon because they, the Skeptics, had proven its impossibility through one or two failed experiments.

Real science involves continual experimentation and improvement which takes place a little at a time over a period of years. And that's what took place with the mental technology of remote viewing. Some of the experiments for remote viewing were unsuccessful and poorly conceived. And when compelled to demonstrate remote viewing under stressful conditions, remote viewers do often fail to perform well. But in spite of failed experiments and other set backs, the SRI and the DIA continued their work on remote viewing techniques. Over time, a workable methodology for remote viewing did emerge.

Remote Viewing (RV) Described:

“The acquisition and description, by mental means, of information blocked from ordinary perception by distance, shielding or time.”

This was the Defense Intelligence Agency’s official definition for remote viewing as found in a document from 1986.

According to the late Lt. Colonel Gabrielle Pettingell, the DIA and the CIA ran a number of remote viewing programs under different names such as Sun Streak, Scanate, Grill Flame, Gondola Wish and other names which were once classified. But the public tends to think of all of this remote viewing research as going under the name of Star Gate. This is because Star Gate is the name that was being used for the remote viewing program at the time of its media exposure.

Although there are a number of different ways in which remote viewing may be done, all of them have these things in common. They are trainable. Their results can be reproduced by others. And they all have a structured set of protocols (procedures) of some kind.

One thing that most remote viewers have in common is a desire to reduce what they call mental noise. This is anything which interferes with the perception of accurate information through a mental means. Jumping to conclusions gets in the way. Substituting imagination for mental perception gets in the way. And analytical overlay can contaminate information.

Sometimes the analytical mind will automatically fill in gaps and overlay a psychic perception with what seems like a reasonable conclusion, and this will prevent information from coming in through a purely nonlocal connection. In other words, the information will come from the intellect rather than from a psychic process. Analytical overlay is similar to what remote viewers call data-fitting.

Sometimes a remote viewer will receive a little bit of information and then try to fit in data to complete the picture. Suppose you saw an image that looked something like the tail of a cat. It might be a snake, it might be a garden hose, but you don't know what it is. Let's say you have an audio impression of a cat's meow. So you put the two impressions together. You take two separate pieces of data and try to fit them together. Although this may be logical, it may also be untrue. And this sort of logical analysis distracts you from pure psychic perception. So this too is just another form of mental noise which gets in the way of pure extrasensory perception.

In any system of psychic perception, you want to avoid logic, imagination and memory. All of these cause mental noise. In the pure silence of nonlocal connection, you perceive reality by looking inward to your deep intuitive knowledge.

Even a telepathic connection to another person's mind can pollute information about a remote environment. Therefore all remote viewing systems have strategies to eliminate these types of mental noise.

In defining remote viewing, we should understand what it is not. It isn't a clairvoyant stream of mental image pictures in the mind. It isn't astral projection. It isn't automatic writing. It isn't divination. It isn't channeling. And it isn't an Out of Body Experience, known as OBE. Although these other psychic disciplines are possible, and some can be trained, remote viewing is a unique system which arose originally from the SRI and DIA research.

In remote viewing, the viewer receives little packets of information. These are like pieces of a puzzle. When the viewer is able to put these puzzle pieces together accurately, he or she comes up with an accurate picture or accurate information. And the way that the remote viewer comes up with these puzzle pieces is by asking himself questions.

Protocols in Psychic Training:

All forms of successful psychic practices involve protocols. These are a set of exact procedures to follow during the process. You don't just wing it, you train yourself to use visualization, imagination, spoken affirmations and physical actions in a ritualistic fashion.

This remote viewing practice involves the exact wording of questions and a standard operating procedure which gives the remote viewer an exact set of actions to take no matter what happens. And that's where Ingo Swann's protocols come in. Basically his approach to remote viewing involved the asking of questions. The remote viewer follows a set of exact procedures. He asks himself questions about the target and then answers those questions by consulting his own mental sensitivity. This type of remote viewing is a mind/body practice. The remote viewer keeps his eyes open and is physically active while doing the remote viewing. He's looking for clues that will reveal subconscious mental perceptions of a remote environment. He consults his own inner connection to the universe by asking questions about a target, and then he physically feels his own intuitive responses as he writes them down.

You should know that the remote viewer is not hypnotized in the process of using the protocols. He is wide awake and is programming his own thoughts and consciousness the way that a computer programmer might operate a computer. And when the protocols are followed, remote viewing does work well in achieving its goal of information gathering.

Remote Viewing Techniques:

In some forms of psychic practice there is a monitor who assists the psychic. I've acted as a monitor in remote healing by assisting a remote healer in asking him questions and directing his attention. This can be useful in complex psychic practices because it allows the psychic to fully direct his or her attention upon the person who is being remotely healed or remotely viewed.

And the remote viewers I've known have an overseer who manages the remote viewers and any monitors that they might work with. By whatever name they call this chief of operations, at least some remote viewers work with an overseer. And by whatever name they use for this assistant, at least some remote viewers work with a monitor of some kind.

Because the monitor can potentially get in the way of the remote viewing process, he or she also has to be someone who has been trained in remote viewing techniques. I've never done any work as a monitor in remote viewing, but a couple of times I did observe a monitor working with a remote viewer. During the times when I personally witnessed this, the monitor was asking questions and directing the remote viewer's attention. But not all remote viewers work with monitors.

You should understand that it's best to use a double-blind procedure. What this means is that the remote viewer is not informed in advance about the nature of his target. The viewer doesn't know at first what he is working on. And any monitor who might work with the remote viewer is also kept blind. So it is a double-blind procedure. This is to say that you avoid what they call front-loading. If you give the remote viewer or his monitor information up front, this will bias the remote viewing. Let's say you want a remote viewer to observe an enemy army base. If you tell him beforehand what he's observing, he'll subconsciously try to recall everything he knows about the enemy and about army bases in general. So when he consults his inner knowing, what he'll be receiving is memory rather than psychic observations, and this will pollute the remote viewing process. Front-loading creates mental noise.

Therefore many overseers use non-suggestive cueing targets when tasking a remote viewer. What that means that you might describe the target with a set of randomly chosen numbers, but not with a name that would suggest any meaning. Instead of saying that you want the remote viewer to view an enemy base, you would tell the remote viewer that you want him to view something like, "target 815497." And only you would know what the target really is. The viewer would only know the the target as 815497. As the overseer, only you would know that this stands for "Semipalatinsk nuclear test base April 27th, 1973." But the monitor who assists the remote viewer might not even know the target number. So everyone involved is given information on a strict need-to-know basis. By using non-suggestive cues, you avoid front-loading.

Also, there is the use of multiple viewers. Really great remote viewers are correct perhaps only 70% of the time. And many skilled viewers are correct only 50% of the time. But if you have multiple viewers tasked with the same target, the majority viewpoint is likely to be correct. If this process is structured correctly, and you have enough multiple viewers, it's possible to produce information that is 100% correct. But it's important that the viewers and their monitors not know who the other viewers are because if they do they might subconsciously and telepathically read the minds of the other viewers rather than reading the target itself.

I knew of a group of Christian psychics who created a unit of twenty-two specialists who would do remote viewing in an organized way. They were not connected to the the SRI or the DIA; so how they were organized was not a reflection of those groups. These Christian psychics had an overseer who managed the unit. He had spent more than a year creating and training the unit. He had a liaison assistant who would communicate with the other Christian group members outside of the unit. There were ten remote viewers. Each remote viewer had a monitor, and together the pair would form a two-person team. So all together there were ten remote viewers, ten monitors, a liaison and an overseer.

All of these people had been recruited and trained by the overseer. Every person in the unit was trained separately from the others. The more talented psychics became the remote viewers and the less talented psychics became the monitors. None of the monitors or remote viewers knew the real names of anyone else in the unit. Once trained, the remote viewers never again met with the overseer or anyone else in the unit, except each with their respective monitor. In other words, once activated, the remote viewer's only contact with the unit would be with his or her monitor.

The overseer only met with the monitors, and never together, only one at a time. Each target cue was written by the overseer and placed into a sealed envelope.

Without looking at the target cue, the monitor would take this envelope and give it to the remote viewer on the scheduled day of the RV session. So only the remote viewer and the overseer knew the target cue. After each RV session, both the monitor and the remote viewer would write up a report which would then be delivered to the overseer by the monitor.

The liaison's only contact in the unit was the overseer. Once the unit had been activated, this group of Christian psychics who funded the unit and received information from it would only meet with the liaison. He would deliver to them reports compiled by the overseer which had been based on the RV sessions. In return, they would give the liaison cash for the unit's funding as well as its mission objectives. And he would deliver these to the overseer in a locked case that only the overseer could open.

This group maintained a strict discipline designed to minimize the mental noise in the RV sessions and to maximize the group's privacy. All of the two-person teams were kept separated from the other teams. The monitors and their remote viewer partners only met when working. When they met they dressed in plain, ordinary looking clothing. Each two-person team had access to a special room located in a remote area which they used only for the RV sessions. Everyone was kept separated as much as possible and given information only on a need-to-know basis. All of the unit's members lived normal lives and never talked about their remote viewing work with anybody outside of the unit. The remote viewers and monitors kept nothing in writing to connect them to the unit, and they were always only paid in cash. When they reported their income to the IRS, they didn't list their work as remote viewing.

I don't know if any other remote viewing units are organized in this way or not. But this unit was incredibly effective in gathering data.

The target which is tasked must be something known to exist and it must be something specific. You don't task a viewer with something vague like, "Any enemy spy you can find." The target must be a specific person, place or thing. Furthermore, it must be specific in time.

Remote viewing (RV) information is best used as a source of information that can be paired with other sources of information. For example, in 1973, RV specialist Pat Price was tasked with observing the Soviet military research facility at the Semipalatinsk nuclear test area. This data was paired with data from another information source when his drawings of a gantry for moving rockets was later confirmed by CIA satellite pictures.

Some remote viewers actually do draw pictures of what they see, and many remote viewers train their drawing skills using the book Drawing on the Right Side of the Brain by Betty Edwards. When I was studying art history at the University, I used this book and was impressed by it. Whether you have natural talent or not, anyone can effectively learn a technique for drawing by using her methods, and the book also reveals something of the nature of the mind.

It's best to practice RV in an environment freed from distractors. These would be noises, electronic equipment, bright colors, hot or cold drinks, wall paintings, picture books, written materials, food, pets, unnecessary people or anything demanding attention. Even an unread book would attract the attention of the subconscious mind and thus become a distractor. So the more things you can clear out of the room that you're working in the better. The ideal environment would be a windowless and soundproof room where everything was colored middle gray. It might contain only a comfortable chair, table, writing utensils, paper and perhaps a glass of room temperature water. And it would be best if the temperature of the room is not too hot or cold. Even something like the background noise of traffic outside could pollute the remote viewing. Subconsciously the viewer might add in the idea of automobiles into a target where there were no cars.

The remote viewer should not be in a bad mood when doing the RV practice. This is called inclemencies. The internal emotions of the viewer might overlay the target and distort it. And so the viewer should also be sober, healthy, well rested and clear headed.

During the training process, the remote viewer should be given prompt feedback. After the remote viewer has completed a task, he or she should be told what the target really was and all other information about the target. This way the student will stay interested and be able to judge his or her progress. And not all remote viewing targets are as easy to view as others. A skilled trainer knows which targets are easy and which are difficult. A skilled trainer is able to match the targets to the skill level of the student.

However, once a remote viewer becomes more skilled, immediate feedback becomes less important. Ingo Swann did an RV session of the planet Jupiter in 1973. In this session he drew Jupiter as having rings. But at that time these rings had never been observed before.

However, years later, in 1979, space probe Voyager 1 flew by Jupiter and observed that the rings do in fact exist. With experience, this type of confidence becomes possible.

Types of Remote Viewing:

There is the out-bounder or the beacon form of remote viewing. In this practice one person, known as a scout, goes out to a randomly chosen target, and the remote viewer remains behind and remotely views the target being looked at by the scout. The remote viewer in such a case would have a telepathic connection with the scout, or would use the scout as a type of psychic touchstone to indicate what the viewing target is. My understanding of this type of remote viewing is that it was used in some of the earlier experiments on remote viewing, and it seems to be currently used mostly in training. If there are practical applications for this, I don't know what they are. A skilled remote viewer doesn't need a scout.

ERV is Extended Remote Viewing. This is usually done lying down in a deep meditative state. The only person I've known who used this type of remote viewing was extremely psychic to begin with and only used some of the typical remote viewing protocols. She would recline, stare at a blank ceiling and answer questions that were being asked by her monitor assistant. He would ask questions about the objects, persons, ideas, time, images and sensory perceptions related to the target. She would answer the questions and he would write down what she said. This could go on for twenty to forty minutes. And then when the session was over, they would write up a report and perform certain mental exercises to clean up any mental debris left over from the remote viewing process.

During the remote viewing process, the mind of the remote viewer becomes entangled with the mind of the person being viewed. This can leave mental debris behind in the subconscious mind of the viewer. Let's say a viewer is viewing the mind of a killer. If the remote viewer doesn't clean out the mental debris from the session by deprogramming his subconscious mind, he might have insane thoughts of violence in his subconscious mind. Skilled remote viewers have techniques for dealing with this problem. And this is one reason why you shouldn't experiment with remote viewing techniques unless you are properly trained by a knowledgeable expert.

ARV is Associative Remote Viewing. Remote viewers have difficulty viewing numbers. Math skills and language are connected with the brain functions of the left hemisphere. Intuition and visualization are connected with the brain functions of the right hemisphere. Psychic insights are first brought in through right brain thinking, and then they are translated into left brain thinking. At least this is the theory. For whatever reason, very few remote viewers can view written language or numbers. It's much easier to remote view pictures or something physical like tastes. So in order to have a precognitive knowledge of an event that involves numbers, you would need to associate a number with either a mental image picture or a taste sensation.

For example, let's say you want to use remote viewing to predict whether or not a stock is going to go up or down in value. In this case you would be remote viewing an event which takes place in the future. You wouldn't try to remote view the numbers on a stock market report. Instead, to do this, you would do something like make a decision to hang up one of two pictures on the wall of your office as a response to the stock's performance. You might decide that if the stock goes up, you will hang up a picture of a smiling baby; but if the stock goes down, you will hang up a picture of a sad hobo. (You should know that it's easier to remote view a target which contains some strong emotion.) Then, having made this decision about what pictures to use, you would remote view your office as it will be in the future. (Remember, in remote viewing time is not a barrier. You can't change the past, but you can remote view it. And not everything about the future is predictable, but you can view probable future events.) When you remote view your office, targeting it on the future date of your choice, you will observe either the happy baby picture or sad hobo picture. Depending upon what you observe, that picture will signal whether or not the stock will go up or down by that date.

To make this point clear, you are not remote viewing the stock market report. But at that future date when the report comes out, you will read the stock market report, and depending upon what it says, you will hang up the appropriate picture. Therefore you will be remote viewing only the picture. And depending upon which picture you observe through remote viewing, you will buy the stock or not.

I have known some persons trained in remote viewing who have made themselves wealthy doing ARV practices similar to what I've described here. You have to judge for yourself whether or not this is ethical.

If you were to really do this type of precognitive prediction of the stock market, you would actually want a number of other remote viewers to be tasked with observing the picture. This is because your own feelings about the stocks might subconsciously pollute the RV session. And you would want the other viewers to operate on a double blind basis. So you would not tell them anything about the pictures or the stock market. And you would not use the same pictures twice.

There are other ways to use ARV. Basically it's the form of remote viewing that you use when you need to acquire precognitive information involving exact language, symbols or numbers.

However, the type of remote viewing that seems to be most reliable and useful is CRV, Controlled Remote Viewing. This is done sitting up with a pen and paper to systematically describe a target. This is done usually in at least four stages.

Stage One: Describe the major Gestalt. A gestalt is the organized whole rather than its parts. Ask yourself if your target is land, water, a compound, a structure or a person?

Stage Two: Describe the sensory data. What are the tastes, smells, colors, textures or sounds?

Stage Three: Describe the dimensional characteristics. How big, how wide and what is the mass?

Stage Four: Describe the intangible, qualitative nature of the target. What is it? How old? Things like this. This is where you start to put the pieces of the puzzle together.

At least some controlled remote viewers use six stages. After doing the first four stages, you would start to break down the information and question why you wrote down what you did. You have to learn to recognize mental noise, to acknowledge it and to reject it. At some point you might go into a four dimensional assessment. The fourth dimension is time. You would position parts of the puzzle to one another and move around in time to get a complete picture.

I'm not encouraging you to learn remote viewing unless you are very seriously committed to it. There are other, safer, systems of psychic training that are easier to learn. For example, training in Reiki remote healing is usually inexpensive and it's easy to learn. With Reiki, or other systems of psychic training such as astrology, there aren't the potential risks which exist in RV. And these other systems of psychic training do work when taught properly, and they do have their practical uses. Remote viewing is not for everyone. However, for various reasons, some people are drawn to RV.

Most practical remote viewing is done with CRV and ARV. In order to learn CRV or ARV, you really need to work with an experienced remote viewer. You might learn the basics in four to nine days of training, but you will spend months mastering the techniques. This is not something you can just pick up by reading a book or looking at a video. Some RV trainers are very skilled and some are hacks. And the skilled trainers often tend to be expensive. And sometimes the hack trainers are expensive as well. So if you seek to learn remote viewing, you have to choose your trainer carefully.

All of the RV training that is presently available to the public arose originally from persons who retired out of the DIA's remote viewing unit. There are still some veterans who originally worked with the DIA in its remote viewing program. And some of them do still train students. For example, at this time, Retired US Army Major Paul H. Smith still trains remote viewers. And there are others. There is a non-profit organization, IRVA, International Remote Viewer Association, which seems to be able to provide reliable information. The Hawaii Remote Viewer's Guild is a non-commercial group that has a positive reputation. But I can't advise you about this in any way, you have to take responsibility for your own choices if you decide to go down this path.

Remote Viewing Mind Theory:

Much of psychic training has to do with the interaction of the analytical conscious mind with the intuitive subconscious mind. All sensory and extrasensory information comes in below the level of consciousness. There is a mental barrier which acts to filter out most of this information before it reaches the level of consciousness. Less than 1% of this information makes it through to conscious awareness. You would be overwhelmed with information if this were not so. Therefore much of what the brain actually does is to filter out information that is not of value to the conscious mind.

Think about the vast array of all of the sensory and extrasensory information that is coming into your subconscious mind at any given moment in time. At your deepest subconscious level of mind, you are connected to the entire Cosmos and to all beings in it. There are millions of data points coming into your mind at any time. So the process of remote viewing is to reduce all of those data points down to only one data point which can be answered only through nonlocal perception. Information is patterns of meaning. With any form of psychic training, you are learning to become sensitive to these patterns. In remote viewing, you dedicate a portion of your subconscious awareness in order to place it onto your target. But that target must be specifically defined in order to reduce the data points down to only one.

For example, if you ask your psychic awareness for general information about an enemy army base, you would still be open to overwhelming data. So the overseer of the remote viewing process must think very carefully about defining the target. The remote viewer will have a nonlocal connection to the overseer and to the target. So if the overseer of the process has defined the target precisely, and the only cue that the remote viewer receives is a non-suggestive target number, all of those data points reduce down to only one data point that can be observed only through a purely mental process. Then it becomes a matter of teasing out this information through a set of exact protocols. In this way, that information which was in the subconscious becomes conscious.

The analytical mind, which deals with numbers and language, is necessary for daily survival. But it hinders psychic insight. The less analytical information that you have about a target, the more likely you are to use a purely psychic means to acquire information about it. Our culture overtrains people to think with language, and in doing so it suppresses intuitive abilities. With training and practice, the psychic learns to let go of analytical processes and to act almost completely on intuition and trained-in habits. At that point in the training where everything becomes purely habitual, any psychic practice, such as remote viewing, becomes possible.

Other Relevant Psychic Research:

Coupled consciousness is research that is being done which demonstrates the nonlocal connection between persons. A number of studies from around the world have found similar results. Two persons in different rooms (which are shielded from electromagnetic influences) are each hooked up to an EEG machine. Their readings begin to synchronize when they are asked to think of one another. This is not a telepathic exchange but rather an extension of empathy through a nonlocal connection.

But think of the significance of this coupled consciousness research. The word Noetic means inner mind or inner knowing. There are more than seven billion people on our planet now. And on a deep level of mind, your consciousness is coupled with all of them. This represents a vast collective mind which if tapped into through a Noetic process could yield profound knowledge.

Between August 1982 and May of 1983, a controlled study was done in San Francisco General Hospital's Coronary Unit. 393 patients participated in a double blind study to determine the influence of prayer on health. They were divided into two groups. One group was prayed for by volunteers and the other was not. The doctors and the patients did not know which patients were in which group. The study showed that the prayed-for group had higher recovery rates. They needed less CPR and had less need for mechanical ventilators. And there have been other similar studies which have showed that prayer can lower blood pressure in prayed-for persons. And prayer has been shown to have other positive health outcomes for the prayed-for person. All of this shows how people can remotely influence the lives of other persons.

The Dark Side of Remote Influencing:

Remote viewing research was only about receiving information through a psychic means, but it soon led to remote influencing. This practice involved using some of the methods for remote viewing to contact a human target and to manipulate that person on a subconscious level of mind. So remote influencing is about using a psychic connection to manipulate the thoughts, behavior or health of another person. And this can be done without the other person's knowledge or permission.

How much the US government knows about remote influencing is unknown to the public because such information remains classified. Remote viewer Joe McMoneagle, CW2, US Army, (Ret.), has said that probably less than two percent of all of the information in the twenty year RV research program has ever been released to the public. That means that the CIA is keeping more than 98% of this research from the public.

So consider this, if CIA and its handlers have a technology by which they can covertly manipulate the health, thoughts and behaviors of others, isn't there a probability that they are abusing this mental technology?

Lyn Buchanan is a well known RV trainer who once worked in the military's remote viewing unit. He has lectured about how remote influencing works. He was involved in the Cornell Hypertension Project which was a controlled study to see if patients with high blood pressure could be remotely influenced. The patients were only being influenced to improve their health, and they had agreed to be in a study. Although the study showed that temporary changes in blood pressure could be remotely brought about, permanent changes could not. However, if you can use remote influencing to heal, which was the intention of this Cornell hypertension study, it's reasonable to assume that you can also use it to harm.

A number of skilled remote viewers have warned of the dangers of remote viewing if it is done incorrectly. In remote viewing, the minds of people become entangled. But this would be a bad thing if your mind became entangled with the mind of someone who is insane. Furthermore, if a remote viewer were to remotely view a violent crime scene, he might become emotionally overwhelmed by the psychic vibrations left there. If a remote viewer were to view the mind of a murderer, and this viewer were to fail to properly deprogram the RV session when he was done, he might find himself with murderous thoughts that he had subconsciously picked up from the target.

In attempting to remotely influence a human target, whatever thoughts or attitudes are in that target's subconscious mind may find their way into the subconscious mind of the remote influencer. So the remote influencer may turn out to be the one who is manipulated against his will. Therefore remote viewing or remote influencing are not disciplines which you should undertake lightly. As I have pointed out before, if you haven't been properly trained with remote viewing technology, you are at risk if you experiment with it.

But if you were a skilled remote viewer, you could also practice remote influencing. In the process of remote influencing you would come up with a series of visualizations and corresponding physical actions designed to communicate effectively to your subconscious mind. Through visualizations and physical actions, the subconscious mind of the remote influencer is programmed to send out psychic messages. These psychic messages remotely manipulate the subconscious mind of a targeted human being. This would impact upon the thoughts and behavior of the target. In this way the targeted person would be influenced through a purely psychic methodology. But he would not be consciously aware of the fact that he had been manipulated.

Remote influencing can be done to heal or to harm. The target of remote influencing might be mentally programmed to become healthier or to quit a bad habit. Or, he might be influenced to commit suicide. Or, he might be influenced to betray his country. Remote influencing turns the target into a puppet. The methodology itself can be used for good or evil purposes. Remote influencing of this sort has been done time and time again, and it is a proven technology of the mind. It's also a technology that can be abused.

The CIA, as well as those who have access to the CIA's research, know a great deal more about this technology than anyone else. I believe that it's reasonable to assume that this technology is being abused. The public can be manipulated like sheep through a combination of propaganda and structured remote influencing. And so long as the public is naive about the existence of psychic abilities, it's possible for unethical persons with this knowledge to manipulate individuals and even social trends by using remote influencing technology.

Therefore, it's no wonder that so much disinformation has been disseminated about remote viewing. A great deal of effort has been used to insure that the general public think of remote viewing as a pseudoscience. However, the more you do research into remote viewing and remote influencing, the more you realize that these disciplines do work. So you should realize that this disinformation which denies the validity of remote viewing is deliberate, well organized and malevolent.

Legitimate Criticisms about RV:

Although RV does work, it isn't the only form of psychic training which does. One problem with RV is that it was developed by the military for military purposes. The best goals for psychic abilities are to attain self realization as well as to heal oneself and others. RV was not originally designed to meet those goals. It was designed with the goals of defeating the Soviet Union and all other enemies of the State. If you start out thinking of psychic abilities in terms of attacking your enemies, you start off with the wrong attitude. Military actions are about fear and aggression. But psychic abilities work better when they are based on feelings of love and a desire for health.

Love based psychic powers are much more powerful than fear based psychic powers. The Heart Math Institute has done scientific, peer reviewed studies that suggest that love is more than just a nice idea, it's a powerful energetic force. For one thing, the electromagnetic field generated by the heart is 5000 times more powerful than the one generated by the brain. Directed loving thoughts measurably influence the double helix strands of DNA. Persons are measurably more intelligent when they are in a loving mood than when they are fearful or angry. Loving energy may even influence matter, such as that of water crystals. Put simply, the vibrational level of psychic energy when it is based on love is greater than the vibrational energies of fear, anger or hate.

As mentioned earlier, I'm the author of the book, Psychic Development for Prosperity, Self Defense and Political Influence. In it I describe a series of techniques for psychic development which were developed by a secretive Christian think-tank. But you don't have to be a Christian to use them. These techniques can be used by anyone who has a faith in some type of loving, spiritual Higher Power. They are designed for persons who live their lives with an attitude of love. And some of the anonymous members of this Christian think tank are skilled remote viewers. And some of them were originally trained in the government's psychic research program. Once you train yourself in psychic self defense, it would be difficult or impossible for you to be the victim of hostile remote influencing. These methods of psychic development described in my book are much easier to train than RV and have no potential dangerous side effects, as does RV. What most people want is to make their lives better, to be healthier and to help make the world a better place. And methods of psychic training less complex than RV can be used to achieve these goals.

If you are interested in my book on Psychic Development or in my free videos on psychic self defense you can find information about them at this website below.
<http://angelicdefenders.theshamecampaign.com/>

But I can't deny the value of RV. The advantage of RV is that when you do have a group of remote viewers who are well trained and directed by a leader who knows exactly what it can do, then there is the potential to receive information of a sort that no other psychic discipline which is presently available can achieve.

Extraterrestrial Contact by Remote Viewing:

Retired US Army Major Edward Dames was the head training and operations in the DIA's psychic intelligence unit. He has spoken on the show Coast to Coast and elsewhere about the nature of intelligent extraterrestrials. I'm not claiming that Ed Dames or any of the other remote viewers that I've mentioned here would necessarily endorse my theories about extraterrestrial intelligence. Nor, in their training of remote viewers would they necessarily describe the process in the way that I have in this book. So you must understand that I am not speaking for them in any of these matters. But I do hope that I have made the case that RV does work, and that I've given you a reasonable explanation about why it works. Also, I believe that it's reasonable to say that among the most skilled of remote viewers there is the agreement that ETs do exist and that humanity's relationship with them is of vital concern.

Once you understand about the significance of nonlocal interconnection, and once you understand about the size of the universe, you must realize two things. First, intelligent ETs undoubtedly do exist somewhere else in the universe. Secondly, some of these ETs probably do have the ability to remotely view and to remotely influence humanity. Therefore, psychic ability and Ufology, rather than being fringe topics, are actually of vital concern.

UFOLOGY

A few years back I was a co-host on a radio program broadcast by a station in the Midwestern United States. Whenever I could, I tried to do shows on ETs and Ufology.

Here in Missouri, there have been a number of memorable UFO sightings. In 1973, in Piedmont, citizens and police reported their cars stalling when a mysterious light sped above them. In Elsinore, people observed strange lights in the sky, and one witness reported the landing of a disk-shaped craft with landing gears and portholes. It took off leaving scorch marks on the ground, which were later seen by others.

There is a fascinating hearsay story about a Roswell-like UFO crash in Missouri. At the time it took place it didn't reach the news media, but it did eventually become a part of the folklore of the region.

This took place in the Spring of 1941 between Sikeston and Cape Girardeau at around 9:00 to 9:30 PM. The story is that a Baptist Minister, William Huffman, received a telephone call in which he was asked to come and pray for the pilots and passengers of a crashed aircraft. When he got there he found police, fire officials, military officers and the FBI. The wreckage did not look like that of a conventional aircraft. It was disc shaped and inside it there were hieroglyphic-like symbols. He also witnessed the dead bodies of little people with large black eyes. The Reverend and the other witnesses were all sworn to secrecy by the attending military personnel.

But when he came home, mildly shocked by the experience, he recounted the story to his wife Floy and his sons. Many years later, on her death bed, Floy told the entire story to her daughter Charlette. And since then, she has told others. Her sister has confirmed this story.

Clarence Schade, the brother of the local county sheriff at that time, recalls hearing a story from him about the crash of a "spaceship with little people."

Rev. William Huffman was a man of good reputation. His integrity was such that it was unlikely that he would lie about such a thing, and he was not known for practical jokes or flights of fancy. So those who knew of him believed that his character was such that he would not have made up this story. And that good reputation also applies to his wife and daughter. Some fire departments files seem to confirm some aspects of the story. And there are some other interesting facts that relate to this story. The more you look into it, the more it has the ring of truth about it. Some serious UFO investigators have looked into this, but with little confirmation. So it remains an interesting hearsay story that many Missourians believe in spite of such thin evidence.

These were just a few of the UFO incidents I talked about on the radio. We evoked more audience response from this topic of than from any other. Although the good Rev. Huffman's story is based mostly upon hearsay, there are many other similar stories from around the world which are backed up with much more convincing evidence. I've studied this subject off and on for decades, and anyone doing honest research must conclude that at least some of these UFO stories are true. Yet the mainstream media ignores UFO-truth as if it were of no importance, and anyone who tries to treat the subject in a serious manner is marginalized.

The UFO-truth deniers say that Aliens couldn't travel to Earth from other star systems because of the great distances. The closest solar system to ours is Alpha Centauri, which is more than four light years away. Human beings do not presently have the technology which would allow us to come close to the speed of light in a space craft. But perhaps ETs do. Traveling close to the speed of light, it might take approximately five years to travel from that solar system to our solar system. However, for long-living space-faring aliens that might not be a problem.

Also, according to Einstein's theory, as you travel close to the speed of light, subjective time slows down. Years might only seem like months. Furthermore, advanced ETs might have those technologies beyond our own which allow them to bypass the barrier of the light-speed limitation. So interstellar space travel is a realistic possibility.

Even some US Presidents have given credibility to the idea that UFOs from other worlds might be real.

President Harry S. Truman didn't publicly admit to the existence of UFOs, but he did admit that if they did in fact exist, they were from other worlds.

He said, "I can assure you that flying saucers, given that they exist, are not constructed by any power on Earth."

President Jimmy Carter said, "I don't laugh at people anymore when they say they've seen UFOs. I've seen one myself."

When he was the House Minority Leader, Gerald Ford wrote a letter to the Armed Services Committee saying, "I strongly recommend that there be a committee investigation of the UFO phenomena. I think we owe it to the people to establish credibility regarding UFOs and to produce the greatest enlightenment on this subject."

When before the United Nations, President Ronald Reagan said, "I occasionally think how quickly our differences worldwide would vanish if we were facing an alien threat from outside this world."

And here is a partial list of American astronauts who have admitted to witnessing UFOs of some kind:

Mercury Astronauts: Donald Slayton, Joseph A. Walker, Scott Carpenter and Gordon Cooper.

Gemini Astronauts: Ed White, James McDivitt and Frank Borman.

Apollo Astronauts: Neil Armstrong, Buzz Aldrin and Eugene Cernan.

Astronaut Scott Carpenter has said, "At no time, when the astronauts were in space were they alone: there was constant surveillance by UFOs."

Mikhail Gorbachev, Nobel Peace Prize winner and former leader to the Soviet Union said, "The phenomenon of UFOs does exist and it must be treated seriously."

Paul Hellyer, former Canadian Minister of Defense said, "UFOs are as real as the airplanes that fly over your head."

In his book Chariots of the Gods, Erich von Daniken popularized the idea that aliens may have been visiting the Earth since prehistoric times. As well as this, the author Zecharia Sitchin has studied ancient Sumerian writings and has concluded that extraterrestrials, called the Anunnaki, have periodically visited the Earth since prehistoric times. Anunnaki is sometimes translated as meaning, those who from the heavens come.

In fact there are many ancient mythological stories and paintings that suggest extraterrestrial visitation. Skeptics say that modern UFO sightings are just another mythological story and that gullible humans are psychologically predisposed to such mythologies. However, Alien abductions and UFO reports tend to be consistent throughout differing regions and time periods; this suggests that they are observations of a real phenomenon rather than imaginary flights of fancy.

Also there are many examples of ancient engineering feats that modern engineers cannot easily explain. For example, many top engineers have admitted that it would be impossible for contemporary human engineers to build the pyramids at Giza. But the Skeptics would have us believe that without any help, using primitive tools, the ancient Egyptians could do what we cannot do with our contemporary technology. And if you look for them, there are many other examples in archeology which suggest that a belief in ancient extraterrestrial visitors is not only reasonable, but it's perhaps the only rational explanation.

Some Ufologists believe that the dropping of atomic bombs on two cities in Japan in 1945 may have triggered a response from the extraterrestrial community. This event may have created a heightened level of interest in humanity by ETs who may fear that our species might become a threat to Pax Galaxias, the peace of the Galaxy. This may have been what caused an increase of UFO activity on Earth following the Second World War.

The UFO phenomenon was introduced to the media of modern world in 1947 when the pilot Ken Arnold observed nine flying disks near Mt. Rainier traveling at a speed of 1800 MPH. Newspapers across the country reported dozens of sightings after this. The US Air Force began Project Sign to study this phenomenon. At first it was believed that the flying saucers were of Soviet design.

At Air Material Command in Wright Davis Air Force, General Twining wrote a memo stating that these observations were real and not fictitious.

The atomic bombing of Japan had been conducted by the 509th Composite Group of the US Air Force in 1945. By 1947, the 509th was the host organization at the airfield in Roswell, New Mexico.

On July 8th, 1947 the Roswell Army Air Field public relations officer Walter Haut announced that a crashed flying disk had been recovered at a nearby ranch. This made the headline of the local paper. The next day General Ramey publicly denied this statement saying that it was merely a fallen weather balloon. Weeks later Truman signed the National Security Act and the Cold War officially began. Project Sign was replaced by Project Grudge and the official cover-up began. The news media and the government began to work together to ridicule all persons who reported sightings.

In November of 1947, President Truman created a secret research and development intelligence operation to study the UFO issue. It was designed to be directly responsible only to the President of the United States. It's code name was Majestic 12 (Majic 12) later to be known simply as MJ 12. Admiral Hillenkoetter may have been the only MJ 12 founding member who believed that the public should be kept in the loop about UFOs.

There's no indication that this group has ever been disbanded, and its information has always remained classified. Presently the covert governmental research into UFOs is still being done by secret intelligence groups. They may not call themselves MJ 12 anymore, and since 9/11 they may report to a shadow government rather than the President, but they don't share what they learn with the public, and that is the legacy of MJ 12.

In groups like this, the flow of information only goes in one direction. All of the information that was acquired by Project Sign and Project Grudge was made available to MJ 12, but MJ 12 only shared it's information with President Truman.

Project Grudge was eventually changed to Project Bluebook. Its purpose was two fold. All UFO sightings were divided into two categories. The easily dismissed cases were made public. These were incidences when an observer mistook some mundane phenomenon for a flying saucer. This type of confusion might be caused by a weather ballon, a flock of birds or the planet Venus. And the people who made these mistaken observations were ridiculed by the news media. However, any sighting that might possibly be real was kept secret and investigated. And some of the early Bluebook investigators took their work seriously. But Project Bluebook was such a successful disinformation tool that public belief in UFOs did decrease as a result of it.

When I was young I would often hear naysayers ask, "If the UFOs are real, why don't they just land on the lawn of the White House?"

But in fact, in July of 1952, there was an incident 15 miles from the White House in which numerous flying saucers were visually observed and witnessed as as solid blips on radar screens. Lt. William Patterson was one of the jet pilots who chased these flying disks and he gave an interview about this incident to the Washington Times Herald. General Sanford referred to these statements as, "Credible Observations."

This incident had been preceded by hundreds of UFO sightings earlier that year along the East Coast. When this phenomenon reached the Washington DC area, Al Chop, a public relations man for the Pentagon, was in the tower at the nearby air field. He observed that the radar blips were solid, and he heard the pilots making radio reports. They described the saucers as making seemingly impossible maneuvers before flying away at fantastic speeds. After witnessing all this Al Chop went from being a skeptic to a believer. The Washington DC incident was reported nationally. Al Chop would go on to help make a movie about all this, which was titled UFO. It was released in 1956. But by then, continual disinformation by the government and the media had suppressed the public's belief in this phenomenon.

As explained above, whenever the government wants to cover-up something, they hire the professional liars at the CIA. The CIA's Robertson Panel was commissioned in 1952 and began official meetings the next year. Before this panel began to meet, Air Force Officer Edward J. Ruppelt had lead the investigations in the Bluebook Project. He had done serious UFO investigations for years and was known to be fair and open minded. But the CIA put an end to all that. The Panel concluded that the government should mount a campaign to discredit all UFO reports and to infiltrate all civilian UFO groups. After the Robertson Panel, Bluebook's only real function was disinformation and Ruppelt was reassigned. After that, any real government research into UFOs was kept completely classified, and Bluebook became nothing but a disinformation scam which was eventually disbanded.

But this didn't stop UFO investigations by concerned citizens who weren't fooled by the CIA cover-up. Major Donald Keyhoe (Ret.) co-founded (NICAP) the National Investigations Committee on Aerial Phenomena. He continually spoke out against the government cover-up and gave credibility to UFO research. But the government did everything it could to interfere with his work. When speaking on a live television show, the Armstrong Circle Theatre, he was censored when the audio was deliberately cut off.

In 1966 the government again attempted another disinformation campaign using the University of Colorado which was paid $313,000 for its cooperation. Edward Condon headed a committee that was supposed to do an objective investigation. However, in August of 1966 Condon wrote a memo to two University administrators that would later be intercepted and made public. This memo made it clear that he intended that his report would find that "UFOs have no basis in reality." So there was never really any objective scientific research being done by him. Originally Donald Keyhoe and NICAP had cooperated with the Condon Committee. But when it became clear that this so-called study was never anything but a cover-up, Keyhoe resigned.

His actions did much to inspire the continuance of UFO research by concerned citizens. The original NICAP existed until the 1980s. By then other groups had been created and were continuing the work. Such research is presently being conducted by MUFON (the Mutual UFO Network), CUFOS (the Center for UFO Studies), and others.

In order to suppress the information that is being put out by these legitimate UFO research organizations, since the 1960s the government has used yet another disinformation tactic to distract public attention. By giving relatively modest amounts of funding money to radio astronomy projects, the government's UFO-truth deniers have pretended to take the search for extraterrestrial intelligence seriously.

Some radio astronomy projects are referred to as SETI, the Search for ExtraTerrestrial Intelligence. In all fairness, I can't characterize SETI in a negative way. The use of radio astronomy to analyze possible extraterrestrial activity does make sense. However, my concern is that radio astronomy is being irrationally promoted as the only way to look for extraterrestrial intelligence. The UFO-truth deniers have created a mythological story in which they assume that all UFO reports based here on Earth have been discredited, which they haven't been. This fantasy story of theirs would leave radio astronomy (which only looks for radio signals from far away solar systems) as the only valid method to search for extraterrestrial intelligence.

The idea that radio astronomy is the best way to search for extraterrestrial intelligence has been popularized because the work of the Skeptic and cosmologist Carl Sagan. I have mixed feelings about him. Although he was a affable public speaker and author who did much to make the subject of astronomy interesting, he never fully acknowledged the credibility of UFO research. He often seemed to dismiss or ignore the serious work being done by those UFO investigators who have realized that the Alien visitors have already come here to Earth. But he did show integrity when he criticized the Condon Committee report for being too narrow-minded. And he risked his career when he protested against the war in Vietnam and spoke out against nuclear war.

The truth is that radio astronomy is only one method in a wide variety of research systems. There have been those who analyze photographs of UFOs, those who study the trace materials left behind by UFOs and those who interview witnesses. And there are other ways to analyze data relating to this subject. There have been some very competent and well educated Ufologists who have studied this phenomena in a serious way, and their work deserves more respect than it has received.

To name just a few:

Jacques Vallee, computer scientist

Nick Pope, former British Defense Ministry Head of the UFO Desk

Stanton Friedman, nuclear physicist

J. Allen Hyneck, astronomer and former Bluebook investigator

Allan Hendry, astronomer

James E. McDonald, physicist

John F. Schuessler, NASA and aerospace administrator

Lt. Col. Wendelle Stevens, photographic analysis expert

In spite of such serious research, the UFO-truth deniers continue their childish ridicule of anyone who tries to enlighten the public. Their obsessive denial is really a form of neurosis. The UFO-truth deniers have preached a fantasy story in which they claim that any ETs which might exist must be light years away, separated by the vast ocean of space which can never be crossed except by radio waves. However, there is a psychological component to this fantasy story. Most people are afraid of the Aliens from outer space. Most people don't want to know the truth about the Aliens, they want to live in denial. And those beliefs which people accept as being true are rarely based on reason or on evidence. Peer pressure and a need to look to authority are the primary drivers in most people's belief systems. Also, when it comes to UFOs, the Skeptics believe what they do because of their inability to face their fear of the unknown.

Sagan's enthusiastic search for far away extraterrestrials was psychologically safe for people, and it allowed people to get used to the idea that ETs exist without triggering their fears. So I have to admit that Sagan's approach did have certain virtues.

I can't say that radio astronomy research is without scientific merit, however there is something about its basic research method which many people fail to understand. The truth is that any television signal broadcast from Earth would degrade long before it came close to the nearest solar system. There is a principle of science known as the inverse square law. In terms of radio astronomy, this means that a radio signal degrades at an exponential rate the further it travels. At twice the distance it's 1/4 as great. At ten times the distance it's 1/100th as great. And the signal degrades rapidly in this manner until it disappears from any ordinary detection system. However, advanced extraterrestrials might have developed technologies that can detect these faint signals. But if you understand quantum nonlocal interconnection, remote viewing, telepathy and the fact that the Aliens are already here -- it's absurd to assume that radio astronomy is the only method for detecting extraterrestrial intelligence.

However, the periodic and modest government funding of radio astronomy is not a waste. This science has shown that radio signals can be aimed, focused and amplified. And this could be used for communication in long distance space travel. And radio astronomy has produced quite a bit of other valid scientific data. There can be no doubt that most SETI members are competent and sincere. And some SETI members do believe in Ufology. But it's unlikely that advanced ET civilizations in far away solar systems would use radio signals as a way of contacting us. And if radio astronomers have detected UFO activities in our own solar system (which may be what they're actually looking for) this information has been withheld from the public.

However the modest government funding will likely continue even without any announcement by radio astronomers of any intelligent extraterrestrial contact. This is because, in so far as the government is concerned, radio astronomy's real job is to discourage all public acceptance of Ufology.

In spite of this, enough honest research has been done by Ufologists to conclude some things about these flying saucers which do in fact exist. Some of the UFO sightings are experimental flying craft built by the government in classified programs. Bob Lazar worked as a scientist at the Area 51 Air Force Groom Lake test range site. He has talked about the back engineering of Alien flying saucers which went on there. Other researchers have looked into this as well. There's no doubt that these experimental, human-made craft are based on technologies which are of extraterrestrial origins. Therefore it's difficult for civilian observers to know if what they are seeing is truly Alien or merely derived from Alien technology. However, based on landing gear imprints, some of these craft must weigh several tons. Repeated observations have shown that they are sometimes seen coming out of larger cigar shaped motherships that can be up to a thousand feet long. At night halos of light have been seen surrounding such craft. Speeds of up to 9000 MPH have been observed on radar and altitudes of up to 60,000 feet.

Respected aerodynamicist Paul H. Hill was a former NASA engineer who wrote about flying saucers in his book, Unconventional Flying Objects. He suggested that elementary particles such as electrons or protons are ejected to form a plasma cone beneath the craft. Most of the thrust is used to allow the craft to hover. When it tilts, that moves the cone of plasma back so that it pushes the craft forward. It can slow down or stop by tilting in the other direction, and the craft can take off at fantastic speeds by tilting on its side to fly like a jet. It can make sudden reversals by flipping over. All of these maneuvers have been observed by those witnessing UFOs.

Some UFO investigators specialize in the physical evidence that is left behind by UFOs, such as burn marks. Many people believe that crop circles are somehow being created by UFOs or some other extraterrestrial activity. Crop circles have been seen in England going back to Medieval times. But crop circle sightings began in earnest during the 1980s. These crop circles have become increasingly complex over time. They seem to represent sacred geometry expressed in the form of mandalas intended to heal humanity and the Earth.

There can be no doubt that UFO activity is actively reshaping our world. And many reliable persons with insider information from the government have acknowledged this.

Apollo14 Astronaut Edgar Mitchell said, “And the evidence points to the fact that Roswell was a real incident, and that indeed an alien craft did crash, and that material was recovered from that crash site.”

Consider some of the revelations that have been made by Col. Philip J. Corso (Ret.) in his book The Day After Roswell. Corso was a special assistant to Lt. General Arthur Trudeau who headed Army Research and Development. Corso was the Chief of the Foreign Technology Desk in the Pentagon. This office was in charge of taking technology artifacts so that they could be reverse-engineered. This process involves the scientific analysis of crashed flying craft to see what technological secrets can be learned from the wreckage. Corso revealed that not only did they have recovered technology from Russian crashed aircraft and that of other countries, they also had the recovered technology from the saucer crash which took place at Roswell, New Mexico. Corso was instructed to distribute recovered materials from it to certain corporate research labs. This resulted in the development of fiber optics, integrated circuits, particle beams, advanced lasers and Kevlar bullet proof vests. Consider all the ways in which these technologies have altered human civilization.

There have been those who have tried to attack Corso's credibility, but that's difficult to do. Corso's career suggests integrity and competence. Corso was Chief of the Counter Intelligence Corp in Rome. Later he was on the staff of President Eisenhower's National Security Council as well as other important posts before becoming the Chief of the Pentagon's Foreign Technology Desk. Because his career was in military intelligence, it's probable that he had quiet permission from those in authority to make public these facts about the back-engineered Roswell technology. At the time of his book's first release, the Head of the Senate Armed Services Committee, Strom Thurmond, endorsed Corso's integrity in the book's preface. Although Senator Thurmond would later say that he knew nothing of any government cover-up, it's likely that Thurmond and others in positions of authority actually wanted the release of this information. After all, this release of information was done in such a way so that those in authority could maintain credible deniability. And the Roswell book helped to promote support for the project that had started as Reagan's Star Wars Strategic Defense Initiative. By 1998, under Clinton, this Reagan-era program had been renamed and public enthusiasm for it was waning. In his book, released in 1998, Corso made this Strategic Defense Initiative seem important again. He made the case that this program was never really about protecting us from human enemies so much as it was about protecting us from Alien Invaders.

This brings up the point about whether or not the ETs are friendly or hostile. I believe that some are hostile and that some are friendly. A person who has had friendly communication with an ET is called a contactee. Persons who have been abducted against their will by Aliens are called abductees. And this Alien abduction phenomenon certainly suggests that at least some Aliens are very hostile. In an incident which took place in the 1960s, Betty and Barney Hill experienced missing time as they were driving home one night. Later, under hypnosis, they recalled being abducted by Aliens and subjected to an examination that was terrifying, painful and humiliating. And many others have shared this experience. In the 1980s, Budd Hopkins and Whitney Strieber popularized this abduction phenomenon. The Travis Walton incident also did much to bring this into public awareness. These aliens are described as having different forms. Some are short grey aliens with black almond shaped eyes. However, similar grey aliens who are taller, and who look like praying mantis, seem to be in charge. There are also humanoid Aliens with a reptilian appearance. And abductees as well as contactees have described other types of extraterrestrials.

Many researchers who have studied these abductions have concluded that hostile Aliens Invaders are gathering genetic materials from humanity so that they can create a hybrid race of alien/humans. Some abductees have recalled observing part human, part Alien hybrids. These Aliens are apparently doing this as part of a plan to take over our world through a depopulation agenda directed at our human race. When you consider the cruelty of the treatment that abducted human beings are subjected to, there can be no doubt that some of these Aliens are hostile to humanity and that they are intending us harm. And when this is viewed in light of other political developments from around the world, one might reasonably concluded that the Alien Invasion of Earth is already underway and is being conducted under a cloak of invisibility. This strategy makes sense because human beings can't resist the Alien Invaders so long as their very existence is ignored.

When the Nazis invaded France, there were patriotic French citizens who fought against them in the French Resistance. But there were other French citizens who became Nazi Collaborators and betrayed their country. So the question is, if the hostile Aliens are in the process of invading us, would there be humans who would betray the people of Earth and work as Alien Collaborators?

The answer to that question is "yes." These Alien Collaborators already exist. They are well known, highly organized and well funded. They call themselves the Transhumanists.

The word Transhumanism was coined by Julian Huxley who was a leader in the United Nations and an Eugenist. In 1957 he wrote about this subject claiming that humanity should take control of the process of evolution and transcend itself. But this Transhumanist movement did not become popular until the 1990s. Contemporary Transhumanists openly state that their goal is to put an end to humanity. They openly plan the extinction of our species. They plan to replace human beings with a new improved species. They plan to do this with genetic engineering, cyborg technology, nanotechnology and supercomputers. They even suggest a timeline for this replacement of humanity by these newly designed intelligent non-humans. A Transhumanist leader, Ray Kurzweil, has said that there will be a global government by the year 2020. And he seems to have an insider track on all this.

So the question then is, will this intended global government be run by human beings or by the Alien Invaders?

Furthermore, you might consider that the Alien Invaders already have a secret, shadow government in place. There have always been powerful and wealthy aristocrats behind the scenes subtly influencing governmental activities to their advantage. Through secret societies, powerful nonprofit organizations and financial institutions, the governments of the world are obviously being manipulated by something other than democratic processes. And collectively these influences may be thought of as a global shadow government of the wealthy elite. But when you take into consideration what is revealed by a knowledge of remote influencing and Ufology, it becomes feasible to consider that this shadow government is itself only a puppet to the hostile Alien Invaders.

And at times this Alien takeover is brazenly revealed. The Transhumanist's Singularity University is a prominent feature of the NASA Ames Research Center. The word Singularity foresees an event in which the human race is to be transformed by developing technologies into something new. But there are those of us who doubt that the intentions behind this Singularity movement are benevolent. The process of Alien conquest was begun by the Anunnaki Aliens thousands of years ago in ancient Sumer. Now it's approaching a point of no return with a Singularity event in which humanity is to be merged and consumed by Alien technology.

This Transhumanist movement seems to have been perfectly designed to serve the intentions of the Alien Invaders. Knowingly or unwittingly, the Transhumanists are doing exactly what the Alien Invaders want them to. When you combine a knowledge of the Alien hybrid experiments with the goals of the Transhumanists, it paints a picture of a group of Alien Collaborators, no better than the Nazi Collaborators of WWII, who plan to betray humanity. So the world is beginning to divide into those who would serve the Alien Invaders and those who would defend humanity.

And I would stand with those who oppose these hostile Alien Invaders. I do believe that the galactic community is watching us and that we live in the time of judgement. But there are benevolent ETs who would help us if we learn to open our minds to them through the positive development of our psychic abilities. As a Christian, I believe that God will see us through this crisis. And I believe that persons of all faiths and philosophies will come together to face these challenges. So that in the end, humanity will survive.

Viva La Resistance!

In other books that I've written, I've addressed the issue of the overwhelming Alien threat that dominates our world now. I've shown the relationship between governmental corruption, Satanic secret societies and the Alien Invaders. And I've talked about some practical solutions to this threat and strategies for dealing with it.
